Elizabeth Emanuel, one of the two designers to work on Princess Diana's dress said she felt "faint" when HRH emerged from the carriage and she saw the many creases that had formed in the gown.

"We did know it would crease a bit, but when I saw her arrive at St. Paul's, and we saw the creasing, I actually felt faint. I was horrified, really, because it was quite a lot of creasing. It was a lot more than we thought."

Elizabeth admitted on ITV in 2018.

You want to look "picture perfect" on your wedding day which is why you have hired the best glam team you can find, your favorite photographer and will be spending your day wearing the dress of your dreams. But did you know your face isn't the only thing that will need a touch up (or two) after walking down the aisle? Many brides don't realize that the "face" of their dress may also need a touch up (or two).

While properly hanging and steaming your dress seems like a no-brainer, the truth is that many brides simply don't think about their dress creasing on the way to the ceremony or wrinkling as they sit down during the reception. Unfortunately, not having the right tools can leave your dream dress looking tired which may not bug you on the day, but it will every time you look at your photos, trust me.

So with that in mind, HERE are my top picks for keeping your wedding dress looking pristine.
